

Abstract

The present invention is concerned with solid, single-dose dosage forms for an increased rate of release of slightly soluble active ingredients. The dosage forms are based on a coherent matrix which disintegrates rapidly in physiological fluids. The matrix comprises one or more slightly soluble active ingredients in the form of fast-release micro- or nanocapsules. The dosage form is particularly suitable for administering those slightly soluble active ingredients for which a rapid onset of action is desired.